

Contents

1 Introduction	1
The Baby Boomers and the Potential for Inter-Generational Conflict	2
The Nature of 'the Family' and Family Obligations	10
The Leverhulme Trust Study of Inter-Generational Lifetime Transfers	17
Conclusions	26
Bibliography	28
2 The Baby Boomers and the Potential for Inter-Generational Conflict	33
The Baby Boomers: A Large, Powerful Group?	34
The Baby Boomers: A Lucky Generation?	45
Conclusions	57
Bibliography	57
3 The Nature of 'the Family' and Family Obligations in the Twenty-First Century	61
Changing Family Structures: Is 'the Family' in Decline?	62
Family Relationships and Financial Transfers	74

	Motivations for Transfers and Social Norms	90
	Conclusions	97
	Bibliography	99
4	The Extent and Nature of Lifetime Gifts	107
	Measuring the Extent of Lifetime Gifts in Britain	108
	Exploring the Nature of Gift-Giving in Families	125
	Conclusions	145
	Bibliography	147
5	The Impacts of, and Motivations for, Lifetime Gifts	149
	The Impact of Lifetime Gifts on Recipients and Donors	150
	Motivations for Giving	165
	Conclusions	176
	Bibliography	177
6	Social Norms	179
	Is There a Consensus on Financial Support Within Families?	180
	What Explains People's Views on Family Obligations?	192
	Conclusions	213
	Bibliography	216
7	Public Attitudes to Different Generations	217
	Public Support for Policies to Help Different Generations	218
	Public Views About Who Has Won 'The Generation Game'	228
	Conclusions	243
	Bibliography	245

8 Discussion	247
The Baby Boomers and the Potential for Inter-Generational Conflict	250
The Nature of 'the Family' and Family Obligations in the Twenty-First Century	255
Conclusion	263
Bibliography	266
Wave 1 Questionnaire: Attitudes to Family Support	267
Bibliography	283
Index	299